Society

Miss Helen Herr, 429 N. Main st., was hostess Monday evening to the members of the Novel club at a 7 o'clock dinner. Jerusalem cherries formed the attractive centerpiece of the table at which nine guests were seated. The evening was spent informally and the fifth chapter of the story composed by the club members was read. The next meeting will be held with Mrs. William Dudley Bunker, 815 Park av.

Miss Florence Foster, 215 N. Lafayette Blvd., entertained Monday with an afternoon bridge, as a courtesy to Mrs. James L. Wilson, who leaves Friday for Charleston, Ill., and will sail for Europe with Dr. Wilson and their sons, George and James, in January. Following an afternoon spent at the bridge tables, luncheon was served to 12 guests, pink roses forming the table decorations. On Wednesday afternoon, Miss Leona Teel, 291 Peachway av., will entertain with an afternoon bridge honoring Mrs. Wilson.

Miss Antoinette Glickman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Glickman, 515 Lincolnway E., and Leo Opperman, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Opperman, of Vienna, Austria, will be married this afternoon at 3 o'clock at the home of the bride. The marriage ceremony will be performed by Rabbi Julius Marx of Temple Beth-El, Miss Cella Abrams will act as maid of honor and Miss Marguerite Glickman, sister of the bride will be bridesmaid. A niece of the bride, Miss Florence Freeman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Freeman, will be the flower girl.

Complimenting Dr. and Mrs. Robert Acker, of Chicago, who have come to this city to make their residence, Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Wilson, 862 Park av., entertained Sunday from 5 to 7 o'clock with an informal reception. Among the guests were Dr. and Mrs. O. L. Wilson of Rushville, Neb.

The regular meeting of the Art department of the Progress club took place at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon at the club. After the business session at which the department chairman, Mrs. Fred Elbel presided, arrangements for the department's booth at the bazaar to be held Dec. 12 to the 18 were completed. The next meeting will be held in two weeks at which time Mrs. Clifford H. Parke and Mrs. Elbel will have charge of the program, "Indiana Artists Abroad."

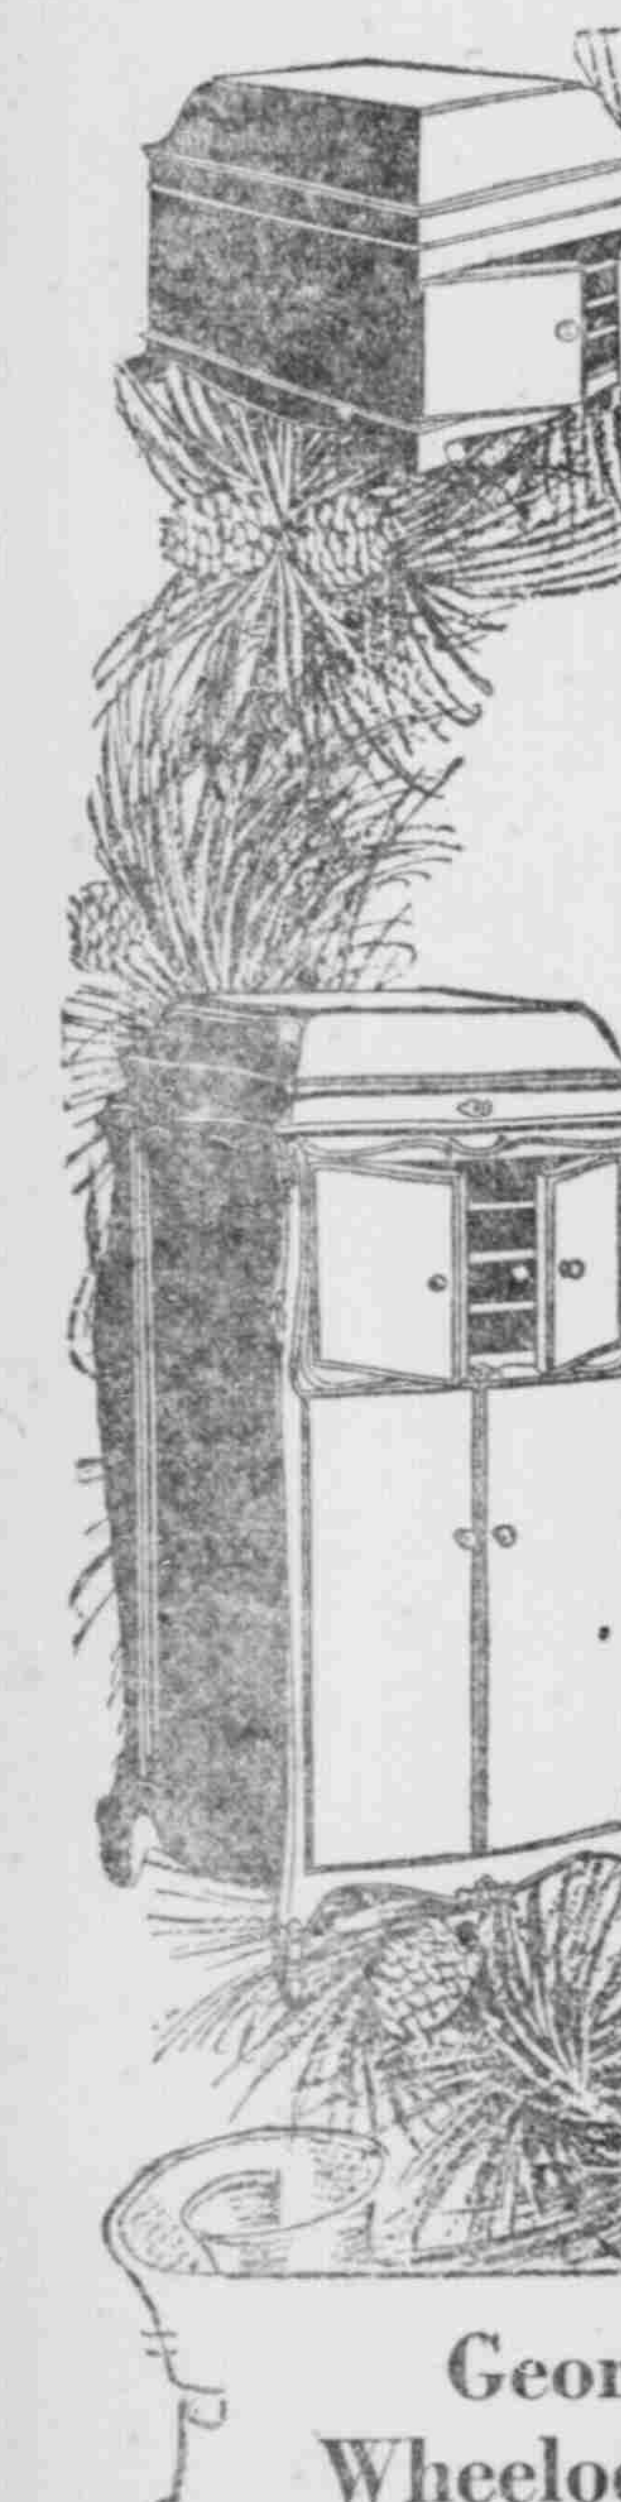

The Goodfellowship club held their bi-monthly dance last night at Bayler hall, about 50 couple attending. The committee in charge of the dance was composed of Mr. and Mrs. James Mac Gregor, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Marchand and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Miller. Gustafson's orchestra furnished the music for dancing.

Revelations of A Wife

ADELE GARRISON

WHAT LILLIAN TOLD KATIE TO COMFORT AND QUIET HER.

As Lillian, with her never-failing, prompt reaction to an emergency, obeyed my command to turn the light up high, and followed that action by shutting the door, I bent over my little maid's bed, and took the hands clutching her bruised throat in mine.

"I am here, Katie," I said soothingly, "and I won't leave you again. Stop crying now."

She clutched at me pitifully and made an heroic effort to control her cries, then broke out into a wild, terrified wail:

"Oh, dot Joe! Dot Joe! He know now dot I fool heem! He go und keel my Jeem, he go und keel my Jeem!"

Lillian and I exchanged a glance of sudden comprehension. This, then, was one of the threats which the mysterious "Joe," now in the hospital, had held over the hapless girl's head—that the husband who adored her in his funny, hectoring fashion would be murdered did she prove treacherous to the line of conduct Joe had marked out for her. And Jim, misjudging her, had left her to face her problem alone.

For Katie! Hers had been, indeed, a hard fight and a great triumph. I felt my spirit how in recognition of the victory over her own terror which the humble, unlettered but great-hearted girl had won.

"You Not Know?" It was no time for half-measures. I stooped and gathered her in my arms as I would a frightened child and held her close, her face against my shoulder, smothering her cries.

"Joe does not know anything," I said slowly, firmly. "He is still in the hospital, and no one has seen him. And we know that in a day or two he will be taken many miles from here. You will never see him again."

She twisted her face away from my shoulder, and looked up at me with eyes in which there was nothing save wild despair.

"Oh, you not know!" she wailed. "You not know. Dot Antonio tonight, dot he's who eke me und try to keel you, oh, dot Joe's boss, everything he say, dot Joe he have to do. He can get into the hospital, can get anywhere. He go straight back, tell Joe I fee a trick by dot, und place on earth small enough for me und Jeem to hide. Dey find us anyvhere."

Is Katie Right? There was such deep conviction in her tones that I could not help a terrible shiver. The two men certainly had been able to plant in her an abiding terror of their power, but I gave her no inkling of my feeling. Instead, I stopped and looked her straight in the eyes.

"Katie, did I ever tell you a lie?" I asked.

"No. Oh, no," she assented fervently.

"Then I expect you to believe me now," I answered slowly. "But Mrs. Underwood can tell you better than I can what happened tonight. Listen to her carefully."

I had switched the responsibility to Lillian, partly because I felt that I could not stand the strain of rehearsing the escape of Smith, partly because I knew what a calming effect upon my little maid Lillian's authoritative manner would have.

"Joe knows nothing of what you did tonight," Lillian began impressively. "We do not think he ever will know. This is the reason we think so."

She paused, and Katie, choking back her frightened sobs, pulled herself to an upright sitting posture in my arms, but she kept her eyes fixed upon Lillian's.

"The man, Antonio, whom you fear so much was captured by Mr. Drake tonight, and then frightened so that his only idea was to get as far away as possible. He was tied up in a room and left to himself, so that he might get away, but still fear that some one was after him. Do you understand me?"

Katie's face had come alive with interest and the dawning of a hope.

"Yes! Oh, yes! I understand," she said. "He got away."

"Yes, to a big car, which is now on its way to New York, and is being followed, so that he will be watched now for months, years if necessary. And your enemy, Joe, will also be watched. Even if Antonio should ever see Joe again, and tell him about your splendid bravery tonight, there will no trouble come of it for you. They will be powerless."

The hope in Katie's face warred with a shadowy but real terror.

"Maybe so, maybe so," she said tonelessly. "But dose two men like big poison snakes. Dey do no mistake—only ven dey dead."

And my heart contracted with a tiny premonitory warning that she had spoken but the truth.

Magnificent armorial bearings and decorations, after being hidden for two centuries under a heavy coat of varnish, are now being restored in Westminster Abbey, London, Eng.

Advice to Girls

By ANNE LAURIE

Dear Annie Laurie: I am 17 years old and have been going with a young man away from here, but here I am interested in a young man here. I work in the telephone office and wonder if it would be proper for me to call up this young man when I am not busy. I invited him to call one evening, but he was going away with his folks and I am wondering if I should ask him again.

C. A. T.

Would not advise you to call the young man up, especially during business hours as there is nothing that embarrasses a man more than to be called away from his work to chat idly with some thoughtless girl. Since you have invited him to call once, I should wait for him to make any further advances.

ANNE LAURIE.

DEAR ANNE LAURIE: I am a girl 17 years old and have been going with a young man for over three years and am deep in love with him. Of late his mother has been making things very unpleasant for us because she is afraid he is going to get married. He says he will not give me up and his mother says if he persists in his folly he will have to leave home. Please advise me what to do.

BROKEN HEARTED.

Your parents should never have allowed you to keep such steady company so young and it is rather late in the day for them to begin to make objections. You are much too young to marry and if you both love each other as you think, you can just as well wait for two or three years yet and until the young man is in a position to marry and support you. Love is very apt to fly out of the window of the cottage where there is no money to pay the bills.

ANNE LAURIE.

DEAR ANNE LAURIE: When a young man asks a girl to attend the theater with him for the first time, on returning home should she thank him for the evening's pleasure, or should he thank her for her company? Should one invite him in and if he declines, should I invite him to call some other time, or should he make all the advances?

PERPLEXED.

It is always proper to thank any one for any courtesy extended to you. It is perfectly proper for you to invite the young man in and if he is the thoughtful sort he will, of course, decline if it is late. You could then tell him you hope he may come some other time.

Your Health

By Dr. R. S. Copeland

Health Commissioner, N. Y. City

Among the most common of human ailments is the pain from burns and scalds. Matches, hot stoves, sputtering kettles, curling irons, fire crackers—there are innumerable ways of meeting with this uncomfortable experience.

The seriousness of a burn depends on its depth and the extent of the surface involved. The age of the patient and the part of the body damaged play a part. Very old persons and very young children are more likely to suffer badly even from moderate burns.

Not only is the immediate outcome disagreeable, but also the secondary effects of a burn are sometimes exceedingly grave. Infection, due to carelessness in the treatment of the burn, or later from accidents, may result in pus formation and blood poisoning.

If there is extensive involvement of the skin surfaces the patient may suffer from shock and may die.

If the head, chest or abdomen are badly burned the brain or internal organs may be involved.

If the burn is not extensive, the chief consideration is the relief of pain. To this end, the air should be excluded. Almost any local measure recommended for burns is intended to serve this purpose.

Various powders are used. Saleratus of baking soda, flour, alum, bismuth, talcum powder, boracic acid—these substances may be sprinkled thickly over the burned surface.

If the hand is the injured part, it may be immersed in a vessel containing soda or saleratus solution.

Subacetate of aluminum is a good remedy to relieve the pain. Compresses are dipped in a five per cent solution, and these are laid on the burned surface. They should be kept wet with the solution. Evaporation may be prevented by covering the compresses with a dry towel.

If the skin is unbroken, sweet oil, vaseline, lard or olive oil ointment may be applied. Such applications should not be used if there are ruptured blisters, deep burns or broken surfaces from any cause. Their use may result in infections of the wounded tissues and in pus formation.

When the surface is broken, pueric acid may be employed. Gauze is wet with five per cent solution and applied to the burn. Cotton is placed over this, and the whole dressing is covered with a bandage.

There are various "secret" remedies alleged to have special virtues in the treatment and healing of burns. Most of them consist of poultices with the addition of olive oil.
